

About Bay News Rising

Bay News Rising – Professional and college reporters training collaboratively for the future of Bay Area journalism.

Bay News Rising, a mentorship program sponsored by Pacific Media Workers Guild, organizes student journalists in the recognition of a growing need for trained coverage of social justice and labor movements — and also to provide a source of ongoing training, networking, mentoring and publishing for student journalists collaborating for the future of Bay Area journalism.

This summer, we will assist students to practice reporting through coverage of economic disparity issues, as well as the ongoing struggles of labor unions and women's rights in the broader context of social justice in the Bay Area. There will be opportunities for breaking, investigative and feature style news under this umbrella, as well as opportunities to practice multimedia and social media journalism. We will work with you to pursue your own angles, too.

We will match you with a professional media mentor. And, we will teach you about the value of your work and how to get fair compensation for your work product. If you get published this summer, we will pay publication fees.

Contact Bay News Rising Director, Kat Anderson, if you are interested in applying for this opportunity: kanderson@mediaworkers.org or (415) 298-1335. Apply now.
